Personal Statement

- I have served in academic and leadership roles for five university systems [Canada (Alberta), Middle East (Doha), USA (Hawaii)], integrating experiential simulation teaching and learning into the healthcare curriculums. I believe there is infinite potential for innovations in the cyberlearning world, integrating experiential simulation-based education (SBE), to build, strengthen, and support our educational capacities and, as a result, improve our local population health clinical outcomes. Working with Hawai'i Pacific University, I am a re-inspired interprofessional SBE enthusiast, with the integration of the disciplines of nursing, public health, social work, and soon physical therapy and physician assistant programs under the umbrella of the College of Health and Society (CHS). My past educational roles have provided leadership opportunities to further SBE innovations within undergraduate and graduate curriculums. Given the challenges we face with the Covid-19 pandemic, this approach is timely. We can strengthen our capacities, making a difference in clinical patient care and safety outcomes through future innovations and process improvements. The vision to enhance the deliberate intimate learning in a diversity of simulation environments by empowering our undergraduate and graduate CHS students and faculty, to get 'close-up and personal' within the expanding healthcare distance learning methodologies and technologies, is within our reach.
